we gave in honor of the Stiftung. Besides six members of the Foundation, most of them with wives, we had the German element of the same organization, the leading Berlin and Bundesrepublik officials, including Mayor Brandt, Germans and Americans intimately associated with the Stiftung and Congress Hall, as well as the French and British, with aides, from the Kommandatura. The house, garden and wine-cellar were just about sufficient for their accommodation. When they left, we sat down amidst the cold baked meats and alcoholic carnage.

Sunny this morning, rainy this afternoon; temperature about 55° Fahrenheit.

After a stay at the office, Guf, an interpreter, the protocol officer, and I went to call on Soviet Ambassador Pervukhin. We drank two kinds of vodka, Georgian white wine, Armenian cognac and coffee, and ate oddments including caviar.
